Galloway Township, NJ- Each year, after an entire semester of preparation, dance majors at The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey, put on the show of their college career. This year, the dance program will present “ChoreoProject 32,” an exciting evening of student choreographed works.

“The audience will see flashy movement, balance, poised elegance, simple solos and complicated group works. The performance, which takes place in an intimate theatre, has a little bit of something for everyone,” explained Rain Ross, assistant professor of dance.

Performances will take place Thursday, December 2 through Saturday, December 4 at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday, December 5 at 3:00 p.m. in the College’s Experimental Theatre, located on the main Galloway Township campus.

The concert, which is the 32nd in a series, will showcase the work of emerging choreographers and promises a range of styles that will entice the audience. Ross said, “From introspective solos, to fusions of hip-hop and modern dance, the students have worked over the course of the semester to hone and refine their skills as choreographers and performers.”

For tickets, contact the Stockton Performing Arts Center at 609-652-9000 or <http://intraweb.stockton.edu/pac/stocktonarts.html>. Tickets are $8 for general admission and $6 for students and seniors.
